Director Karen Lund

Welcome—or welcome back—to Harlequin! Tonight, we invite you into one of theatre's great laugh-out-loud love stories: a comedy about newlweds, tight quarters, big personalities, and the wonderfully ridiculous things human beings do when we are trying to love each other well.

I love romantic comedies because they let us laugh at the most serious thing we do: love. There is something irresistible about watching two people full of hope, confidence, and absolutely no idea what they are getting themselves into.

A good love story gives us the whole human range: vulnerability, joy, sorrow, petty frustrations, and the just-plain-ridiculousness of trying to share a life with another person. Humans are funny—and we are especially funny when we are figuring out love.

Neil Simon's classic comedy Barefoot in the Park drops us into the first breathless days of a marriage, when romance is high, patience is low, and every tiny problem feels like a test of destiny.

In this play, love has to survive stairs, neighbors, in-laws, expectations, exhaustion, and the great marital question of whether two very different people can build a life without driving each other completely mad.

Beginnings are exhilarating—and often hilarious. They are especially funny when two people are trying to launch something they hope will last a lifetime while still learning where the furniture goes, what each other needs, and how much compromise love actually requires.

When I think back to the beginning of my own marriage, I laugh at our youthful certainty and admire the courage it took to begin—to choose one another, again and again, even when life became less tidy than we imagined.

So this show is presented as a tribute to lovers young and old: to all the “foolish” people brave enough to love, laugh, stumble, forgive, and build something real and lasting. Here's to the young person who still lives in each of us, whatever age we are.

May tonight remind you of the joy, absurdity, courage, and comedy of choosing love—and may you laugh loudly along the way.

Enjoy the show,

– Karen

Featured Gallery Artist

RAVENNA BECK

Ravenna Beck is an Olympia, Washington-based artist working primarily in oil, acrylic, and mixed media. Her contemporary impressionistic and semi-abstract work explores the emotional undercurrents of everyday life through expressive color, layered surfaces, and symbolic imagery. She has exhibited throughout the Pacific Northwest and is an Olympia ArtSpace Alliance grant recipient. In addition to her studio practice, Beck is a meditation teacher, recovery advocate, government bureaucrat, and parent.

Artist's Statement: "I use textured oil and acrylic paints and a vibrant color palette to make intimate-feeling modern impressionistic and semi-abstract depictions of people, objects, and places that communicate the familiar experiences of life's melodrama.

I prefer the surfaces of my paintings to look like they've got a checkered past. Each piece begins with several layers of paint, creating unique scars and baggage that ultimately make for a more interesting final outcome. My reference photos typically come from ordinary moments that grab my attention, and I frequently photograph myself to work through figure poses.

Making art is my practice of authenticity and audacity. I'm drawn to the impossible task of transforming inherently meaningless materials into something emotionally recognizable, trusting that public embarrassment is a small price to pay for making something honest."
