DIRECTOR'S NOTES

Thornton Wilder wrote the bulk of Our Town in 1937. The play opened on Broadway in 1938, and won the Pulitzer Prize for Drama that same year. It has since been regarded as one of the greatest American plays ever written. Edward Albee went further and called it "probably the finest American play ever written so far."

Wilder has said that he wrote the play as "an attempt to find a value above all price for the smallest events in our daily life." This American classic poses the fundamental question: what does it mean to be human? Wilder asks this through the lens of a 1938 America. It works because his audience saw themselves there. And we see ourselves there, too. Some of us. A lens has edges, however, and

Wilder shows us his: Professor Willard shares some of the town's statistics in Act 1 — English "brachiocephalic blue-eyed stock," Anglo-Saxon, Scotch-Irish — and notes the earliest inhabitants, the Cotahatchee tribes, "now entirely disappeared."

Eight decades later, Martyna Majok stands outside that census. Sanctuary City centers two young people in Newark, American in every way but the one that counts at a border. Wilder asks to see the preciousness of our daily life. Majok interrogates that little word "our" and asks what Grover's Corners never had to: whether or not we get to keep it. Her characters can't own the ordinary routine Wilder finds precious — their experiences are all on loan. She calls it "a Cubist play about love(rs) and Dreamers," one moment turned and turned until you see every side.

Sentimentality and self-pity, she tells us, "have no currency in these characters' world."

In a world where social media has taught us to judge before we see, and American politics has taught us to divide ourselves into tribes, the preciousness of the ordinary has become something we may barely be able to recognize. But underneath all this daily noise there is a fundamental truth: time only moves in one direction. We can only see into and be informed by the past. We can only exist in the present. And we can impact only the future. These are two plays about memory, about how we might learn from what we've seen, about how we live in the now, and about how we honor the time we have. In conversation, it is my hope that you see two things: we're all human, regardless of who we choose to include or exclude, and that recognizing how far we've come also shows us how far we have to go.

On why he felt Our Town was the finest American play, Albee added that the reason is harder than it sounds: "the play makes us understand that if we don't live our lives fully and completely, we've wasted everything we have." Isn't that impossible, he was asked. "Yeah," he said. "But you got to try hard."

FEATURED GALLERY ARTIST KATIE HARMON

Katie is an ink & watercolor artist who creates whimsical & sometimes thought-provoking art in an illustrative style.

She lives here in Olympia & is often inspired by the beauty of the PNW. Watercolor painting requires a buildup of thin layers of color & lots of patience offering Katie time to meditate on the themes behind her art: often personal growth or the beauty & irony of this world.

She believes strongly in the accessibility of art, which influences both her storybook like style as well as the types of reproductions she offers, often things that can be used in everyday life.

“I love capturing movement & grace – a moment in time just before it becomes something new. It’s a challenge to interpret form & texture into the stark contrasts of black & white, then re-imagine it into the brilliant hues of watercolor. As I continue to grow as an artist & experiment with different subject matter, I find myself gravitating to forms with movement. I'm excited by prospects of dresses, dance, hair, sea life & fish with their glorious fins. Moments of beauty forever frozen in time on my page. I believe a piece of art is only great if it connects with you on an emotional level. My goal is to find a moment that moves you emotionally. A moment that captures your glance and gives you pause to enjoy that moment of beauty with me."
